Duration: 12 months

Research Project:
IFAMID project presents a new framework for the analysis of family demography. Drawing on recent theoretical developments, and exploiting cognitive and methodological insights from a wide range of disciplines, most importantly from sociology and political science, it is argued that trends in family formation (and its dynamics) not only derive from broad global forces, but also from institutional "quality" and cultural traits and, critically important, from the interaction between the two.

Job description:
As part of a larger research team, the candidate will contribute to econometric analysis of large data sets, contribute to the development of research ideas within the realm of the IFAMID project, perform data analysis and write research papers and policy briefs, and take part in international conferences.
