

History of Institutions: Civic, Economic and Political

Academic year 2023-24

Instructor: Guido Alfani

E-mail: guido.alfani@unibocconi.it

Office: Grafton Building, Via Roentgen 1, room 6-D2-04

The objective of the course is to provide a long-run analysis of institutional change, from a wide range of perspectives. Institutions are often considered among the potential explanatory factors of fundamental historical processes, or of differences among contemporary societies. This course is aimed to provide the students with a deeper understanding of how institutions (might) explain current dynamics, as well as of the nature of long-term institutional change per se. This general objective will be pursued with reference to a specific set of institutions, spanning the civic, economic and political spheres. Additionally, the course will provide an introduction to how social-science research on past societies should properly be conducted.

Course grades will be based on a final written exam, based on the lectures and the compulsory readings of the course.

Part III: Workshops – “doing research” on past societies in a social science perspective

This section of the program is meant to allow students to know about current projects in social-economic history pursued at Bocconi on topics related to the course. This academic year the focus will be on two projects/research agendas:

- Prof. Alfani will discuss the ERC project, SMITE-Social Mobility and Inequality across Italy and Europe, 1300-1800 (discussion will also introduce the ERC – European Research Council – as a major provider of research funding in Europe)
 - Prof. Mattia Fochesato, as a guest lecturer, will discuss recent achievements in the study of inequality & institutions in early (pre-historical) societies and will provide an overview of his research agenda on this and related topics.
- A. Bogaard, M. Fochesato and S. Bowles, “The farming-inequality nexus: new methods and evidence from western Eurasia”, Antiquity, vol. 93, Issue 371, 2019, pp. 1129-1143.

Part IV: Long-term Development (and Collapse) of Political Institutions
